Over Thinking

Disclaimer: I don't own Ninjago. Enjoy.

Lloyd sat in the field and tried to enjoy the breeze, gazing up at the fluffy clouds that rolled on by. He sighed. While the world moved on around him, inside he felt frozen, stunned… Hurt. The thought of defeating—killing—his father made his heart ache. Even after these years of training he still… He gulped and felt his throat clench tightly shut.

He pinched the bridge of his nose and closed his eyes. He had to get over this; he knew he did, but… It's harder then he thought.

"Why ya looking so glum Lloyd?" Kais gentle voice rang in his ear and his thoughts and suddenly the ninja was sitting, embracing him from behind. He buried his face in the teenagers shoulder with a small smile.

"I'm not glum." Lloyd retorted somewhat defensive. "No, of course not! Why would I have a reason to be—"

"I get it Lloyd; you're not looking forward to _it_. But you have to forget it for now… We're supposed to be out here relaxing for the day and I doubt you can relax if your mind is stuck on the future." Kai sighed.

Lloyd melted into Kai and watched the clouds roll by and after a while tried to stand up. Kai didn't let go however. "Let go Kai…" Kai only hugged him tighter, snuggling closer.

"No." He said smirking.

"Kai!" Lloyd whined.

"I don't wanna!" Kai whined right back.

"Quit being childish, Kai." Lloyd teased before sighing again, this time with a smile.

End file.
